Mental Health: Take Time to Talk.

"Mental health is something that we all need to talk about, and we need to take the stigma away from it. So let's raise the awareness. Let's let everybody know it's OK to have a mental illness" -Demi Lovato.

Mental illness affect us all -1 in 5 Canadians struggle with mental illness, since it is an invisible disability many experience stigma on top of their condition. In order to help overcome the stigma and help those that are suffering, it is important to 'Take Time To Talk.' Talking can take the form of checking in with a friend, talking about mental health more generally or learning about statistics so you can educate others. CAMH notes that "the stigma attached to mental illness often delays or prevents a person from seeking the help they need. As a result, people often struggle in silence, which only compounds their pain and suffering."

Why is this important?

From adults to youth, mental health related issues affects us all:

- 70% of mental health problems have their onset during childhood and adolescence.
- Youth people aged 15-24 are more likely to experience mental illness than any other age group
- During Covid, 52% of Canadians noted that their mental illness had gotten worse.

This DIY challenges you to learn more about mental illness and break the stigma by talking to your family, friends and peers about the importance of mental health.

Mental Health: Take Time to Talk.

DYK? By the time Canadians reach 40 years of age, 1 in 2 have—or have had—a mental illness (CAMH). Additionally, mental illnesses are the leading form of disability in Canada.
